OLYMPIA — The Workforce Board will host two final virtual meetings Dec. 8 and 15 from 2-3:30 p.m. to seek feedback on the state's workforce plan. The plan, Talent and Prosperity for All, will guide workforce development investments from 2024-28.

These virtual meetings are open to all. Employers, workers and all community members are welcome to provide feedback. Register here.

Washington's workforce system includes many programs and services totaling roughly $1.3 billion in state and federal funding that serves about 500,000 Washingtonians per year. Examples include apprenticeships, on-the-job training, services for job seekers, and more.

Workforce development impacts communities throughout the state. Many Washington employers face a serious shortage of skilled workers, and workers need family-wage jobs that offer stability and opportunities to advance.

The public may also provide feedback through this online survey. The Workforce Board has collected feedback from communities across the state through 24 public forums, community meetings, local Workforce Development Centers, surveys and more.
